WITH ALL

After the speeches the King an Queen and Crown Prince walked around the semi-circle and shook hands with all present. Mrs. Whitlock, remindful of court ceremonials of which she gained knowledge during her long residence in Belgium curtaied to the King and curtated also to the Queen and kissed her hand. The other American women merely shook hands and closely inspecied the white apparel of the Queen and her lady in waiting.

A large growd had gathered in River Street outside the Hobeken pler and had cheered the King and Queen when they were first seen as the George Washington was warped into the dock. The royal visitors re on the flying bridge, the queen industriously taking enapshots and the king surveying the scene through spyglasses. The King and Queen were on the bridge throughout the trip up the bay and river from the PARTY PASSES IN AUTOS.

There were scattered cheers from the sidewalks as the autos moved through 33d Street to Seventh Avenue, north in Seventh Avenue to Eld Street and east in 33d Street to the Waldorf-Astoria, where a crowd of about 1,000 under umbrellas had assembled. Some cheering marked the appearance of the royal visitors.

Manager William McCusker met the party at the door and escorted the King and Vice President Marshall, the Queen and Mrs. Marshall and the Prince and Secretary of War Baker to the suite reserved for the Belgian visitors. The 33d Street entrance was partitioned off and formed a private passageway.

Ambassador Whitlock, Mrs. Whitock and other members of the welcoming party and of the escort of the King and Queen arrived at the botel at intervals for about an hour after the first autos appeared. Ambaissador and Mrs. Whitlock went to the apartments of the visitors. Later Vice President Marshall was the host at a luncheon given to the visitors and members of the committee of
